PHYSICIANS CONSULTED.

I suppose there is not in the whole of a quiet country experience anything of human suffering more sad than is sympathy and pity to be felt to the extent as to witness the excruciating pains of a poor mortal suffering from that fearful disease Dyspepsia. Never does there have been consulted at the tribunal of opinion among medical men, as to the true character of this disease, some treating it as the Result of a nervous disease of the system, and others viewing it as an acute nervous disease, but it is now generally admitted to be a disease arising from a poison circulating in the blood, and further it is admitted that rheumatism can never be thoroughly cured without expelling from the system the acids from the blood by a constitutional internal remedy. We feel confident that those will feel better satisfied and relieved after the first consultation physician who has found out that a true cure for this stubborn disease has been discovered. The following testimony from a Portland gentleman cannot fail to satisfy all that the

Diamond Rheumatic Cure

is a wonderful Medical Discovery

PORTLAND, Dec 11 1874

Prof. Diamond Hiller

Dear sir: I testified by you, I wish to bear testimony to the efficacy of the Diamond Rheumatic Cure. During the past year I have suffered great pain from that common and agonizing affliction, Rheumatism. My shoulder was so painful that my left arm was powerless and I despaired of ever again raising the use of that limb. I was induced, by hearing of the many marvellous cures accomplished by the agent while staying at the Preble House, to try a bottle. It is sufficient to say that while I am in the enjoyment of its results by the taking of three small bottles, I was entirely relieved. I have kept by since, thinking and I am sure, all again in 1869 from pain, with no use of medicine of any kind and the feeling of new life I experience I attribute to the use of the Diamond Rheumatic Cure. Have the kindness to pass my testimony to Experience against for the benefit of suffering humanity.

CYRUS HANSCOM, Temple St.

FLEETHER FREEF.

LAKE ELIZABETH, Nov 13, 1874.

Prof. Diamond Hiller

Dear Sir: This is to certify that I have been a sufferer from Rheumatism in the shoulder for the past three years and during the last year I could not walk, my knee has been bent down upon the ground, and I have tried in vain for relief. I heard of your Diamond Rheumatic Cure. It is truly a wonderful remedy. Respectfully yours,

MANDA M. BROWN.

Mrs. Capt. Walden is witness to this statement.

The discoverer of this medicine is called the assistant of the hospitals of London and Paris for the past twenty years in treating this malady a specialty. And this is cried on from high and low, to compounding to all the evil results in the treatment of this disease. Who is Mrs. Winslow.

As this question is frequently asked, we will simply say that she is a lady who, for upwards of thirty years, has untiringly devoted her time and talents as a Female Physician and nurse, principally among children. She has especially studied the complaints and wants of this numerous class, and, as a result of this effort, and practical knowledge, obtained in a lifetime spent as nurse and physician, she has compounded a Soothing Syrup, for children teething. It operates like magic—giving rest and health, and is, moreover, sure to regulate the bowels. In consequence of this article, Mrs. Winslow is becoming world-renowned as a benefactor of her race, children certainly do RISE UP and CALL her BLESSED, especially in all the cities in this city. Vast quantities of the Soothing Syrup are DAILY sold and used here. We think Mrs. Winslow has benefitted humanity by this invaluable article, and we sincerely believe thousands of children have been saved from an early grave by its timely use and that millions yet unborn will share its benefits, and unite in calling her blessed. No mother has discharged her duty to her suffering little one, in our opinion, until she has given it the benefit of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup. Office of The Maine Centennial Board, Portland, July, 1875.

The American Centennial is now an assured success, and within a year the nations of the earth will exhibit their choicest works of art, their manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, alongside our own, in the vast buildings and enclosures of Fairmount Park in Philadelphia. It is now universally conceded that no previous World's Fair ever had greater facilities or brighter prospects, and we most earnestly urge the people of our own State to respond in every possible way in order to be justly entitled to some share of credit for the great success of this Industrial Exhibition.

We appeal to the people of the State for a just Exposition of our industrial and material wealth. We want the products of our Cotton Mills along the Saco and Androscoggin, the fine Woolens that have made Berwick, Vassalboro, Dover, Hartland and other manufactories famous, our Iron Works, our Farms and every valuable contribution to mechanical skill; the finest samples of garden and field crops, specimens of our woods, wood manufacture and grasses and the finest products of our stock farms, our dairies and our fisheries.

And, above all, we desire to have exhibited to the nation and the world the vastness and variety of our material wealth. We want collections of precious stones and metals; the lime of Knox and Aroostook, the iron and gold of Sagadahoc, the rich granite of Hallowell and the far north the wonderful slate quarries that span town ships and counties, and which comprise and combine every quality the earth has ever produced; the marvelous granite from the pure white of Hallowell, to the mottled of our coast and inland, the red of Jonesport, and the marble of Deer Isle.

Full information as to space and classification will be furnished by the undersigned. Contributions should be ready by Jan. 1st '76.

Reduced rates of transportation are promised and specific terms will be seasonably announced by circulars.

Correspondence is solicited from all sources, and every question and suggestion will receive ready attention.

Let all unite in the spirit of the invitation and the promise; for in benefit to individuals and in honor and advantage to the State nothing so important can ever again offer, and if we are true to this opportunity, we shall soon be make a showing in '76 that will do credit to our people, and be a beacon to our State.

July 5, 1875.

Rev. Dennis in last week's Telegraph says candidate and we should judge, very properly censures the lack of judgment exhibited by Rev. J. C. Abbott, in accompanying the larger portion of the time at the Rowe vacation meeting dinner with an array of horse meteorological statistics bogey plus fast lodgers at the members of the class of 1825. That remarkable class has usually been amiable honored and after looking in the external glory of Longfellow comrade Bailey it was thought that its less lights might have surrendered the after dinner hours to the practical talk which would unloose the purse-strings of the donors for the benefit of the College treasury. So liberal a variation as that of $1,000 by Speaker Blaine, who has no personal connection with the College might well have raised the condition of the pulpit of opulent graduates of the institution who had been put in good humor by the skill in turning of Beecher, and it is estimated that Mr. Abbott's fulsome discourse in preserving to Everett Bowdoin from several ten thousand dollars. The historian may therefore claim to have proved a high exemplar of another to the annual exercises of Longfellow, himself.

Another remarkable incident of the commencement of the year was the holding of the class Day exercises of the Seniors elsewhere than under the "Old Oak Tree." The faculty had modified the programme by assigning Tuesday for Class Day, so that the exercises should be held while the students remained under the authority of the College. This change was caused by the fact that some of the classes have had the night before made upon themselves by indulging in vulgarity and gross abuse of their privileges, and it was deemed expedient that these exercises be held before the temptations were repeated. The seniors resented the interference with custom and engaged in public hall in the village where they went through their farewell ceremonies quietly. The exercises were conducted in a manner most creditable to the class, in the beginning opening prayer by one of its members to the parting song. The Chronicler Mr. W. J. Curtis, feeling is disclaimed to the first instance in a refusal of the use of the College Campus to members of the alumni, but the references to the faculty were all gentlemanly in tone. Among the professors the mention of whose names elicited applause from the new graduates were Prof. Rockwood, now of Rutgers College, Prof. Brackett, now at Princeton, Prof. Goodale, now at Harvard, Prof. A. S. White, now connected with Major Powell's expedition, and the venerable Professor Packard. The class warmly applauded the suggestion that the College should have retained the services of the instructors above named.

The Boston Post has been much more ingenuous than ingenuous in its comments upon the canvass in Maine. It has never published Col. Smith's letter nor has it even given to readers a fair statement of its character, but has contented itself with denouncing it as an assault upon Gen. Roberts' services in the field, which is in no sense true of the document. When the Post talks about "slander" of Gen. Roberts it surely is bound to cite an instance but we challenge it to quote anything of the kind from the Republican press of this state. It ought to be quite as much beneath the dignity of so prominent a paper as the Post to proclaim that "their own weapons are turned against" the Republicans by the publishing of a silly anonymous attack on Mr. Blaine in the Maine Standard as a reply to the specific arraignment of an "aggressive" Gubernatorial candidate by a well-known soldier and journalist like Col. Smith over his own name. In this campaign anonymous letters have been the weapons of Democrats and not of Republicans. If the Post finds the canvass in this State warmer than it expected, it may locate the responsibility by reading the Democratic candidate's belligerent and "aggressive" speech and letter of acceptance, and such modest words as these which appear surrounded by a defiant rooster in the campaign Prospectus of the two home organs, the Bangor Democrat and Commercial:

These papers, published in the city of GEN. ROBERTS' residence, will bear the brunt of the fight, and will neither ask nor give quarter.

The Republican press are not in quite so sanguinary a mood, but respectfully claim the right to indulge in truthful and dispassionate criticism of the claims of these belligerent "patriots" to public confidence and support.

IS TWEED STILL A POWER?

[From the N. Y. Evening Post.]

When Tweed's obese figure crossed the threshold of the Court of Oyer and Terminer on the way to Blackwell's Island, less than two years ago, bearing the burden of Judge Davis' cumulative sentence, the former master of the ring seemed to be a broken and ruined man. Everybody had then asserted that he was still a mighty power in the State, and had predicted that he would soon make his influence felt. The assertion would have been ridiculed and the prediction regarded as loose raving. Neither the one nor the other would be dismissed so contemptuously now. Since Tweed was sent to jail, indeed ever since the exposure of his crimes, he has borne himself, not, to be sure with that higher faith which sustains a brave and innocent man unjustly accused, but with a sullen confidence which cannot be without some foundation. He has not behaved like a man bankrupt in fortune and force. He has seemed to be fortified by a quiet assurance that things would yet turn out favorably, and it cannot be denied that the course of events has gone far to justify his hopefulness. Another man—we do not mean necessarily a friendless and penniless man, but a man of ordinary position—would have succumbed long ago to circumstances. When a bank officer or a merchant's clerk steals money, the first step of the defaulting principal is to seize whatever property of the defrauded can be found, and restitution to that extent is speedily entered. But not a cent of the stolen public money has been recovered from Tweed, although it was notorious that he had invested much of his plunder not in portable goods but in real estate which could be reached by legal proceedings. An ordinary man, whose offences were one-tenth as great, would have been consigned to swift punishment. Tweed, after comfortably serving a petty larceny sentence as a guest of the Warden of the prison is discharged. Reason for his difference are not hard to find, nor is it difficult to conceive why Tweed has not thought it worth his while to run away, but has patiently remained at home and unobtrusively worked for his own restoration.

In the first place, he has all the power which great riches can give. His share of the proceeds of the ring robberies is variously estimated at from six to ten millions of dollars. Not a cent of this vast sum has returned to the taxpayers from whom it was filched. Deducting all he has given to his relatives, all he has paid to secure a political following, and all his lawyers' fees—which last he himself says amount to $500,000—there is a great deal left. Tweed is a rich man, measuring his fortune by millions. A man with so much money, and shrewd and unscrupulous to use it, is in a peculiar sense a power. But Tweed is in turn to another source of influence—the possession of valuable information. Too little importance has been attached to this consideration. It is impossible that a man, for years at the head of a corrupt government, associated with many men not only in systematic swindling but in political frauds minute and comprehensive, controlling largely the administration of the state as well as the city, should not be the custodian of dangerous secrets. Tweed has published none of them. His enemies have been ascribed to magnanimity, but is it not rather part of a shrewd policy? Is it not possible that he can serve himself better by keeping the secrets than by parting with them? Is it extravagant to believe that there are facts known to Tweed which if he should give them to the newspapers or the attorneys of the people, would make infamous men in lofty places whose reputations are now unsullied? Is it incredible that there may ever be robes of judicial ermine which he might soil? Upon the assumption that such facts are known to Tweed, it is easy to see what effective use he can make of them by withholding them from the public journals and the prosecuting officers.

There is no reason in the nature of things why city and state who Tweed should not now be a power in the state and the city. There are, on the contrary, grounds for believing that he still is so. And perhaps we should not have to look far for particular manifestations of that power. That the influence of Tweed is stronger than public opinion, and stronger than the laws, evidently is the firm belief of a citizen whose knowledge of men and things, whose purity of character, and whose fidelity to the public interests are familiar as household words. There is no mistaking the meaning of Mr. O'Conor's latest and most remarkable paper. He contends that peculation has triumphed not by means of and in spite of the law. He is not a man to waste words, and certainly his words are wasted unless he has evidence to support his grave accusations and intends to use it. The further movements of Mr. O'Conor and his associates will be awaited with intense interest by citizens who believe that Tweed still a power and are anxious to know how long his evil influence will continue.

DEMOCRATIC MISQUOTING OF REPUBLICAN SOLDIERS

[From the Portland Press.]

In the year 1869, we think, on the occasion of the Democratic State Convention held in this city, (the Press is mistaken in the date which was June 28, 1870) the Young Democracy concluded that it was time for that "spent reminiscence" known as the Democratic party to disband. Those who were present will remember the hot words on that occasion. Among the speakers was one W. G. Chadbourne who said of the present Democratic leader in this State: "Who is this Marcellus Emery? What has he done for the Democratic party? * * * * * The Democratic party owes him nothing, but had it not been for the loyal Democracy, he would have dangled from a Bangor lamppost in the early part of the war! * * * And perhaps it would have been better for the Democratic party if he had been hanged." Since 1869 the Democracy have so far forgotten Mr. Emery's crimes that they have allowed him to make himself the most potential man in the party, but it is quite otherwise with Republican soldiers in Bangor and elsewhere. Neither his Commercial nor Mr. Pillsbury's Standard will ever become the recognized mouthpiece of that class. When, therefore, they say that certain Republican soldiers in Bangor denounce the "open letter" they say that which is false, for we have seen letters from several of the very men they name, warmly endorsing the same. We have also seen more than a score of letters from prominent soldiers in different parts of the State, warmly approving the same. When these gentlemen speak they will not select those papers which are the successors of Jeff Davis' state papers in Maine during the rebellion, or select Blaine, Conkling, Emery and Pillsbury, as their spokesmen.

COL. SMITH'S REPORT.

BANGOR, July 14, 1875.

To the Editor of the Whig and Courier:

The Maine Standard and kindred papers, in attempting to blur Col. Zenro A. Smith's military service, strike at the whole regiment of the First Maine Heavy Artillery. If those Democratic editors will apply themselves to the uncomfortable work of examining the records of the war they will find that the regiment went through as hard fighting in one year as any command in the field, and that in one year's fighting they lost one more man than any other Maine regiment lost in three years. They enlisted as infantry, expecting to go directly to the front. In May, 1864, they left Washington with sixteen hundred muskets, and in October they come muster but one hundred and eighty-seven. In that regiment Zenro A. Smith enlisted as a private and fought his way up to a colonelcy.

FIRST MAINE HEAVY ARTILLERY.

The Portland Argus having persisted in entertaining Fernando Wood's false statement that the official register contains the names of 86,000 office-holders—a statement conclusively contradicted when it made it—the Press proposes that the Argus hire some Democrat at $6 per day to count the names, in the Press office, and if he can show Fernando's statement to be correct the Press will pay the counter and promptly state the result. We don't see how the Argus can well avoid coming to the scratch.

DELEGATES ELECTED. A Dover correspondent writes that the following delegates, said to be anti-Powers, were chosen in that place to the District Convention by a vote of 59 out of a total of 81—S. O. Brown, C. S. Lougee, Edwin Lambert, D. E. Dunshore.

Fort Fairfield has chosen Daniel Foster, Jesse S. Averill, Stephen E. Phipps and Jesse Drew who will support Mr. Powers.

THE CENTENNIAL. In another column we publish an appeal from the Centennial Commissioners of Maine to the people of the State in behalf of an adequate representation of our resources and productions at the great exposition next year. We commend its perusal to all who can in any way aid the design of the Commission.

Why in the name of common sense do certain Democratic journals continue to hunt up and print affidavits to show that Gen. Roberts was a good officer and brave man while connected with the army? No Republican paper has said to the contrary, and most of them have declared he was. Why must his political friends cast suspicion upon him by those uncalled for affidavits and "silly declarations?"—Portland Press.

CALIFORNIA FARMERS MARKETING THEIR CROPS. The Grangers of California, in no way disheartened by the failure of E. E. Morgan & Sons, and the complications and losses resulting from it which since their first attempt at reaching a European market has proved disastrous, have commenced making arrangements for the direct shipment of their grain the present year to Europe. An agent has been despatched to Liverpool with instructions to charter such vessels as may be necessary, and arrange for the receipt and sale of the products. Communication with headquarters will be maintained by cipher. Although the crop this year is not expected to be nearly so large as last, the farmers are in good spirits and in a good financial condition.

OLD IRONSIDES. It has been reported that the frigate Constitution was awaiting destruction at the navy yard in Philadelphia, and the Administration and Navy Department have been sharply attacked by the Democratic papers on the strength of this report. The Boston Advertiser says that "a private letter from a gentleman high in authority, whose attention had been called to one of these attacks, states that there was never any intention on the part of the Navy Department to break up the "Constitution." On the contrary, she was sent to Philadelphia for the express purpose of being repaired and put in order, and it is intended, that by the time of the Centennial exhibition she shall present an exact fac simile of the original Old Ironsides."

Did Shoot his Father Shot by his Son.

The shooting of Samuel Bailey by his son yesterday, resulted from a long abuse of the boy's mother and threats by Bailey that he would kill her. He had been living with another woman for a long time and was in his money, but refused to make a home for his wife and children and live on them. Yesterday his son read a note which the father had written to the woman he had been cursoring with, in the presence of his mother, when the father threw a plate at his wife, swearing he would kill her. Then he threatened her and tried to force her out of the window, when the son fired his pistol and the old man beat him with a stove lid. The boy then fired and the father fell. The boy then went into the street, called a policeman and gave himself up. When they got up stairs the father was dead. The boy is 22 years old, of good character and a printer. He was today committed by the coroner to the Tombs to await the result of an inquest.

REMARKABLE SINGERS. Of the Hyers sisters, who are to give concerts in this city next Friday and Saturday evenings, the Maine Farmer says:

"These colored vocalists are very unlike the ordinary Jubilee singers who have visited our State for a year or two past. They are well-educated and trained in music and respire with fine effect, not only the jubilee songs of the south, but the more difficult compositions of Strauss and other celebrated musical writers."

Half a keg of powder and a dozen pounds of dynamite were stolen from the tool chest of Street Engineer Coombs, at the Grove street sewer, between Saturday night and yesterday morning. Should the thief be found up, it would be a comfortable way of disposing of him; but there is great danger that some innocent person may also become a victim, as the dynamite is a dangerous article to leave lying around loose. Why it was not more carefully guarded is a question which some one should answer.

SEVERE ACCIDENT. We are informed that a little son of Dr. H. F. Pell, of Brewer, met with a shocking accident yesterday, under the following circumstances: It seems the little fellow was standing on a fence, from which he fell, striking on an iron brace which had been broken off, and the jagged edge entered the thigh, passing upward into the pit of the stomach, inflicting a terrible wound. A man near by who saw him fall lifted him up, and took him home, where he received medical attendance, and last night was as comfortable as could be expected.

DEATH OF LADY FRANKLIN. A despatch from London announces the death of Lady Franklin, widow of Sir John Franklin, in that city, Sunday night. She was the daughter of John Griffin, Esq., was born about 1805, became in 1826 the second wife of Sir John Franklin and in 1836 accompanied him to Van Diemen's Land on his appointment to the Governorship of that colony. When, six years later, he started on a third expedition to the Northern Seas, and when serious apprehensions were first entertained respecting the fate of the Erebus and Terror, Lady Franklin's name became familiar to the public. In the spring of 1848 she offered rewards of two and three thousand pounds to any persons discovering or affording relief to the missing party, or making any extraordinary exertions with this object. In 1849 she addressed a moving appeal to the people of the United States through the President of the Republic, for active co-operation in the search, which was nobly responded to by Mr. Grinnell. In 1850, on the eve of her husband's departure on this voyage to the Arctic seas, she saw the last of her husband and his companions. The results of the same effort of Lady Franklin's [illegible] Mediterranean in 1854, overwhelmingly brought home proof that Sir John Franklin and his party must have perished. In 1857 she [illegible] Sir John Franklin's nephew, Mr. Clements R. Markham, to undertake the work of the Arctic Land Expedition, which Mr. Markham accomplished in 1860 [illegible] Mighty was the sensation which the news of the death of Lady Franklin has created in this city, where she was well known and universally respected for her many acts of charity and her great wealth, which she has devoted to the benefit of her fellow-creatures. The Relief Committee of the Arctic Expedition, which was formed in 1857, and which was composed of the most prominent men in the city, has been dissolved, the work which might otherwise have remained to this hour in doubt and obscurity, was ascertained by Captain McClintock's expedition. The House of Commons voted £9000 to the officers and crew of the Fox, and £2000 for a statue of Sir John Franklin, to be erected in London; and the Royal Geographical Society, in testimony of their appreciation of Sir John Franklin's important geographical services, and of his widow's persevering efforts to bring them to light, conferred upon Lady Franklin the honor and exceptional distinction of their founder's gold medal, at their anniversary meeting in 1860.

MURDER IN MEDWAY.

Terrible Case of Uxoricide Last Saturday Night—William Pangburn, Eighty-two Years of Age, Kills His Wife with an Axe.

His Commitment to Jail in This City Last Evening—Statement of the Prisoner Concerning the Horrible Affair.

On Sunday the inhabitants of Medway and vicinity were horrified at the discovery of a murder which had been committed in their midst over night. The victim was a woman sixty-one years old; the perpetrator, her husband, a man her senior by twenty-one years. The details of this uxoricide by an octogenarian are sufficiently sickening to gratify the most morbid taste for tragedy, while the case presents many circumstances of a most unusual if not inexplicable character.

THE CRIME.

The name of the man who committed the crime is William Pangburn, aged eighty-two the 10th of March last. His wife was boarding or living with her sister, Mrs. Mary Jane Jones, and he had only returned from the Provinces on Friday last, where he had been since last March. He stayed with his wife on Friday night; on Saturday he visited several people in the vicinity, returning to the house of Mr. Jones, and Saturday night Mr. and Mrs. Pangburn retired in good season. When Jones got up Sunday morning to kindle the fire, he found Pangburn already up, by whom he was told to go into the bedroom, Mrs. Pangburn was found dead in bed, with her head nearly severed by a blow from an axe, struck at the back of her neck. Directly after the discovery the household was thrown into the greatest confusion, and as the terrible news passed rapidly through the town the wildest excitement prevailed. It was not till three or four hours had elapsed, however, that any movement was made for the arrest of Pangburn, who remained about the place without showing any desire to make his escape, and when taken into custody did not offer the slightest resistance.

THE EXAMINATION.

He was kept in charge of Constable Barker, over-night, and yesterday morning an inquest was held by Coroner Scribner, of Springfield; and after a preliminary examination before Justice Cutler, the prisoner was fully committed to await the action of the Grand Jury at the August term of the Supreme Judicial Court in this city. He came down on the St. John express last evening in charge of Deputy Sheriff Scribner and now occupies a dungeon in the murderers' row on the east side of the jail, the next cell but one to Carson's.

Mr. Scribner says the feeling against the prisoner is very strong in Medway and vicinity, and that it was found necessary to lock after a son of Pangburn's living there, who swore to take the old man's life. It came out in evidence that Pangburn has always been jealous of his wife, and that he has often threatened her. It also appeared that he had treated her cruelly, and on Saturday made remarks to several of the neighbors that would show premeditation to do the dreadful deed. Mrs. Jones, the sister at whose house she was staying, testified that Mrs. Pangburn had told her on Saturday that she feared for her life. The night the murder was committed the axe stood in the corner of the room occupied by the aged couple.

A number of things are interpreted now as indications that the butchery was coolly decided upon and as coolly executed. The manner in which he called attention to the lifeless body of his wife, afterwards remaining about the premises, however, are opposed to this idea. He did not deny that he had committed the murder, and showed no little feeling at what he had done. On the way down in the train yesterday he talked with Sheriff Scribner without reserve, and said he would give two worlds like this if everything could be put back to where it was before Saturday night.

INTERVIEW WITH PANGBURN.

The prisoner, securely handcuffed, was taken from the train to the jail in a hack, and on arriving there was subjected to the usual examination before being placed in his cell. This he submitted to without objection, nothing contraband being found on him. When asked if he had a knife in his boot, he asked, "How could I walk with a knife in my boot?"

Shortly after being assigned to the quarters he will occupy for the next few weeks, he was visited by a representative of the WHIG AND COURIER, having just been served with supper. He ate nothing, but drank the tea, remarking that "tasted good." As seen through the bars he does not look his full age by at least ten or a dozen years. He is rather above the medium height, and has a frame that must have been powerful in his younger days. His profile is sharply cut, with slightly sloping forehead and prominent nose; his hair is well ripened by years, his eye is clear and sharp, and as he talks he looks one squarely in the face. His dress is a neat black suit, and his general appearance is not unpleasant. In language and manner he appears to be a well-to-do farmer of more than average intelligence.

While his manner was subdued and somewhat sad, he conversed readily, answering freely and without the slightest hesitation. He says that he was born a St. John, and is a "Blue Nose." For many years he lived in Musquart, parish of Kent and county of Carleton, N. B., where he had two farms. He has been married twice; by the first wife he had seven children, of whom four are now living. The names of these are Francis, John and William, and Mrs. Johanna French, who keeps a hotel or restaurant on the line of railroad between St. John and Halifax. The maiden name of his last wife was Eliza Rand, who lived about eleven miles from Fredericton, to whom he was married forty years ago, and by whom he has had nine children, with six now living. By his two wives, therefore, he has had sixteen children, of which number ten are living. Of those by the first wife, Mrs. French lives near Bloomfield, N. B., Mrs. Carr lives at Kennebecasis River, Mrs. Charles Estabrooks lives in Lincoln, Edward is in the Provinces, William, George and Andrew, the two youngest, [illegible] Mrs. Jones, who was the wife of the murdered man, is a sister of his first wife. Mrs. Rand, the mother of Mrs. Pangburn, died some years ago at the age of ninety-six years. The deceased was a native of Boston, Mass., and was married to her husband in Fredericton, N. B., where she resided for many years before her marriage. She was a woman of good character, and was highly respected by her neighbors. She was a member of the Methodist church, and was a kind and affectionate wife and mother. Her husband says she was a good woman, and cleanly, and that he had loved her. He says he had never threatened her life, adding: "I never wanted to hurt her more than I want to hurt you, standing there."

When asked how it all happened he said he didn't know. He said his wife went to bed at 9 o'clock Saturday night. There were two doors connecting their room with others,—one of them the room occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Jones, which was left open during the night. He slept on the back side of the bed and got in two or three minutes before his wife did. They conversed pleasantly together for a little while, agreeing upon a place where they would move the next day; "we lay and talked as clever as ever we did." The next he remembers he found himself sitting on the front edge of the bed; he doesn't know whether he had been there half an hour or three hours. His head felt badly, and after a while by the light of the moon he saw an axe lying on the floor in front of the bed. It was not in his hands, and it seemed a range to him that an axe should be there, for it was not there when they went to bed. Then by the light he noticed his wife's face that was turned towards the front of the bed; he wondered how he got over there without waking her up, and perceiving how pale she looked went up to put his hand on her head and found it was growing cold. He picked the axe up and carried it out of the room, and when Mr. Jones got up to kindle a fire told him what had happened. He didn't see any blood on his wife, or on the axe when he carried it out. He says he cannot explain how the killing took place, but thinks he must have supposed he was having a night with a beast.

Pangburn made his statements in a straightforward manner, but did not seem quite clear in his mind at all times. He says things don't seem right to him somehow, and that a number of times lately he has had a bad feeling in his head, which soon goes away. When asked, at what time he was arrested he said he didn't know whether they had him locked up one or two nights. "At the examination," he says, "I answered all as fair as I could, but I made some mistakes I've no doubt." While taking a tear or two had gathered in his eye, and speaking of how horrid the whole thing seemed to him, he said, "I would give the world to have it all back." He said some of the people in Medway seemed to have an idea that he is demanded, and followed anxiety that the reporter shoot do not get the same impression, asking if he did not talk as a man with his head all right, to which an affirmative response was made. He's a little deaf, and when finally left for the night, with a wish for his comfortable repose, he had removed his boots and coat, and lying down on the narrow bed, his hands were tightly clasped across his head.

Whether the killing was a cold-blooded, premeditated murder or a tragedy tricksible to hearsay, or to the phantasies of a somnambulic condition, the case presents many curious points for solution. But it hardly seems in the nature of things that a man of his age, after living with a woman for forty years, who had been the mother of nine of his children, should by any stretch of the passion of jealousy be led to deliberately cut off his wife's head as this was done. The theories of the case will be put to the crucial test next month, when from the facts in evidence the jury will sift the truth of the whole matter.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

Our Medway correspondent, "Looker-On," writes:

"William Pangburn, aged eighty-two years, killed his wife with an axe last night. They were on a visit to Emery Jones', whose wife is a sister of the murdered woman. The family got up in the morning and found Pangburn sitting out on the door step. Mrs. Jones went into their bed-room, and found Mrs. Pangburn dead; her head was nearly cut off. Pangburn had not lived pleasantly with his wife for some time, and it is thought that jealousy is the cause of this terrible deed. Great excitement exists throughout the town."

THE WISCONSIN CAMPAIGN.

A BUSINESS MAN'S OPINIONS—THE REPUBLICAN STANDARD-BEARER—WISCONSIN BACK IN THE REPUBLICAN LINE.

MARINETTE, Wis., July 14, 1875.

To the Editor of the Whig and Courier:

The political campaign in Wisconsin has opened by the selection of Hon. Harrison Ludington of Milwaukee as the Republican candidate for Governor, who was unanimously nominated at the Convention held at Madison on the 7th day of July. The Convention was called considerably earlier than usual this year, but we believe that the action of the committee in calling the Convention at an early day will be no detriment to the party. The Republicans of Wisconsin are always willing to have their candidates and principles thoroughly discussed, believing that that the widest and fullest dissemination of their views will be the best assurance of success.

The Hon. Harrison Ludington is the present Mayor of Milwaukee. He was born in the State of New York, and is about 60 years of age. At an early day he came to Wisconsin, settling in Milwaukee, where he has accumulated a fortune and won the esteem and respect of his fellow-citizens irrespective of party. His popularity is shown by the fact of his having been three times elected Mayor in a city largely Democratic. He was the Republican candidate for Congress last fall from the Milwaukee District, but was defeated by his Democratic opponent, although by a largely reduced majority. The great strength which he took into the Congressional district—[illegible] the Democratic strongholds of the State—[illegible] throughout the length and breadth of this Commonwealth, and has resulted in his nomination and election to the office of Governor.

Published by H. O. Houghton & Co., Boston.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK for August, is the finest issue of the year and its lady readers will find it full of interest. A Gunpowder Plot is the story of an assault upon a hornet's nest, in which the strategy of the attacking party has to contend against the power and numbers of the garrison. Besides all this and much more, there are stories by Helen C. Weeks and Emily Huntington Miller, a paper on the collection and preservation of "sea-weeds;" a description of A Boarding-School in 1870, and a delightful

A DUCK HUNT IN JAPAN

THE WIFE OF BOWIE '80 WILD THAT
HUNT WERE TAME

An American gentleman travelling in Japan has sent us the following account of a duck hunt in which he participated some time ago, some features of which will doubtless strike the American sportsman as novel.

The other day I went on a wild duck hunt with my interpreter and one guard. We started early, and proceeding through the rice fields for some distance crossed a low line of hills lying to the north and passed up a fertile valley about four miles long to a village where the people had made preparations for a grand duck hunt in our honor. Our coming. Near by was a small lake, sheltered among the hills and near the base of a mountain called the Dragon's Back.

It was a most picturesque place, with a pure green shining the margin of the water and clumps of bushes and reeds scattered along in various places. The entire surface of the lake was covered with ducks, while clouds of them hovered over the lake and wheeled to and fro in wild confusion. The whole neighborhood was in a state alive with them.

It has not long been the resort of ducks, but the people had never shown a disposition to drive them from the neighborhood, but had contented themselves with noting the coming to with nets.

The consequence was that the ducks had never seen what it was to be shot at and were quite tame. When it was known that I was coming there to hunt the ducks many entered my room and seemed to be greatly pleased to come with me to my hunting sport. The men had cut a wide few mounds of pine branches resembling Japanese huts along the edge of the lake and at the points most frequented by the ducks. As soon as each one of us had quietly settled down in a secure place, the interpreter and guard built a fire and cooked a dinner. As soon as it was over the sport began. The ducks had never seen a gun before, and they were so tame that they would not fly far from us, but would swim about in the water, quacking and preening their feathers, and we could shoot them as they sat on the water. We killed a large number of them, and then we had to stop shooting because we had more than we could use. The poor things knew not what we had come for, but always been treated with kindness, and they knew not what was the matter with them. The dead ducks were in a pile. Even they were quite upon the water. Indeed, some of them were so tame that they would not fly until we had come very close to them. I was so tired that I had to stop shooting because I was ashamed to kill so many of them
